PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE OF DANIEL WEBSTER.

DANIEL WEBSTER." Having been, with brief intervals, nearly all his life in the public service, either in Congress or the Cabinet, Mr. Webster resided at the seat of Government more, perhaps, than in Massachusetts; so much indeed, and became thereby so identified with the society of Washington, that he got, during many years, to feel more at home there than anywhere else; although his attachment to his true home and his affection for the land of the Filerims were deeply seated and sacredly the subject, and found that, although he had given many to friends for autographs of the illustrious statesman, he had preserved a number of familiar impromptu notes of Mr. Webster, which were frankly submitted to the writer. Several of them were found highly characteristic and amusing, but he was unwilling, for reasons that may be readily conceived, to permit them to be made public. After a deal of importunity, however, he allowed the writer to retain a tew of the more playful, which are now subjoined.

The first is brief, but as it relates to a state paper which made a great impression at the time

The first is brief, but as it relates to a state paper which made a great impression at the time, it will be read with interest. The day before the famous Hulsemann letter was transmitted to Congress, Mr. Webster sent it to Mr. Seaton to read. After it was returned, and on the morning it was to be sent to the Senate, it occurred to Mr. Seaton that the word "patch," as applied to a great empire, would appear rather undiplomatic, or beneath the dignity of such a state paper, and like an attempt to belittle an adversary government, and therefore he dispatched a note to Mr. Webster, suggesting, if not too late, the substitution of another word. He received by his messenger the following reply:

tion of another word. He received by his messenger the following reply:

"The deed was done before I got your note;
but patch means a small piece of ground,—vide
Webster,—vide Shakespeare, in Hamlet. D. W."
And with what exquisite grace did Mr. Webster, in the following epistle solicit from his friend a present of choice wine!

"Impart your portion to the poor,
In money, and in mest;
And give the starving, hungry soul,
Of that which you do"—drink. "My Dear Sir—We look for Mr. Archer to dine with us to-day, and he as you know, is an irreclaimable Sherry man. Now, it is a lament-able fact, that in this house of Mr. Burderies, from garret to cellar, there is not, in any nook, closet or corner, a single bottle of good Sherry

"But further. There are, they say, some things to be had for money, and other things that can only be had for love. Now at this present moment, there is in this city, and in regard to moment, there is in this city, and in regard to good sherry—'no purchase in money' As to the rest, let imagination supply it!

"If a single bottle should happen to make its appearance here this forenoon, I would give it to Mr. Archer with the air of a satisfied host, nor whisper whence I stole 'the balmy spoils.'

"Mr. A. was uncommonly fine on Wednes-

"Yours, D. W."

Alluding to a very shie speech made by Mr. Archer, in Executive sension.]

Although Mr. Webster's dinners were always all that could be desired, his invitations were oftentimes quite original. Witness the following for two separate days:

"My Dear Sir—A mar. in health, of a bright and cheerful morning, generally feels happy after what Lord Bacon calls 'an apt breakfast." Such is my condition at the present moment. There is consolation in an excellent herring, a cup of coffee, and a piece of toast. is consolation in an excellent nerring, a cup of coffee, and a piece of toast.

"I have heard from Mr. Gales in answer to a note I sent him yesterday. But I expect the whole Intelligencer to dinner to day, at four o'clock.

"Yourn trait, DANIEL WEBSTER."

"New Yoak, March 21, 1850.

"New York, March 21, 1850.

"Dear Sir: I am a good deal baset here, for copies of my speech, by some friends, and shall be equally so when I reach Roston. Pray put my unhappy case before Mr. Ground.

"I found a great panic here. The article in the Mational Intelligencer, of Saturday, struck like a thunderbolt. It is regarded as doing the highest credit to the paper, both for honest patriotism and shility. The alarm in now subsiding, under a confident feeling that the Senate may be relied on.

"I go to Boston to-morrow, or next day, leaving Mrs. W. here. I hope all are happy at you house. Yours, truly, D. WEBSTER."

suggested to me, what I had not noticed, that Mrs. S. was one of the inviters. This reversed everything. I then cared nothing for engagements, bid defiance to colds and catarrhs, and hastened off an acceptance. Such is the power—; but I must restrain my pen.

"Une reunion Gastronomique, sans femmes, est un Parterre sans fleures;" &c., &c. I would quote more of these just sentiments, but I can not trust French to my pen, any more than to my tongue. Yours, affectionately,
